Outright Vermont Comes Out With Style

Every year at the beginning of October the leaves start to change color, the air turns cooler and queer organizations dust off their pride flags from June and hang them "out" for National Coming Out Week. With events already geared toward celebrating Queer history month, the staff at Outright Vermont decided upon the nifty slogan "you should get out more." It was agreed that this catchy phrase and a flashy ad campaign would get the attention of youth in the Burlington area and from around the state.

Womyn's Group, a monthly occurrence, kicked off the week with a lively discussion about famous queer women of the past. The women at the meeting shared their lesbian heroines and learned a great deal about women in queer history who forged a path before them. Tuesday featured a screening of The Laramie Project in honor of the anniversary of Matthew Shepard's death on October 12. The film is based on a series of monologues collected from townspeople in Laramie, Wyoming, in the aftermath of Shepard's death. The viewing of the film created a very somber mood among youth, informing them about the details surrounding those who were involved with the tragic event.

Hearts and minds got a cheerful pick-me-up on Wednesday with the Ice Scream social at Drop In. The youth came in from the cold evening and indulged in the frozen delights of Ben and Jerry's and some good company. The cine-madness continued on Thursday with the sidesplitting flick, But I'm A Cheerleader. Friday was the icing on the cake - literally! Friday was National Coming Out Day and Outright celebrated >>
