Woolf, Vita Sackville-West," and other women authors of the late-Victorian and early modern era. "Mary even worked at a used bookstore. We ended up with several thousand books in a little tiny farmhouse. "The irony is that when we moved here, we got rid of a lot of the books. And we still have hundreds of books in boxes that we haven't yet found space for," Donovan added. Innkeeping is a bit like teaching, the two women agreed. "You're on all the time," Bouvier said. "But we're used to that. And we get breaks - we're pretty booked on weekends, especially holidays, but during the week we have fewer guests or none." "We like people," Donovan added. "And we want to share the house. Throughout this [renovation] process, the house has been a presence of its own." It was built in 1865, Bouvier related, by George Holmes, who had also built barns and covered bridges in the area. "We've got 3-foot-wide beams under here, I'm sure," she concluded. Fortunately, Bouvier loves to cook, and Donovan declared, "I love to make beds. I love to do laundry and set the tables," all repetitive tasks of innkeeping. The Inn is listed on several travel and B&B sites online, where most of their reservations originate, including purpleroofs.com, iloveinns.com, and gayvermontinns.com. "We hope to be comfortable," Donovan said of their clientele, "so anyone who comes can be comfortable here," whether they are gay or lesbian, bi, trans or straight. ▼
