Dear Carrie:-

Your letter written some ago, has not as yet been answered, for I expected to hear from home again soon, and for that reason I waited.

Your letter was nice, I like to get such ones; only you must be a little more careful about spelling and punctuation, that is the most trouble I have about them, their not being punctuated at all, it is hard separating it off into sentences.

Am sorry to learn you have been sick. It seems your times of being sick come when you would like to go out, it was too bad you could not go to school, it being the last day. As for the musical entertainment, am glad you have no part in it. It has not a very elevating programme at any rate.
