

From One to Many

Hundreds from Vermont and hundreds of thousands from across the country were in Washington, D.C. last month. Now that we have come back home we will not be silent. Each of us knows that we are not the only one.

It doesn't matter how many were counted in D.C. Each one who was there remembers a time when we thought we were the only one. When the threat of isolation kept us silent and hidden and maintained our isolation. Everyone who was there knows beyond question that our numbers are huge. From one to many is a big step. It's irreversible.

It will not always be easy. Not all the press is favorable. Not all the laws have changed. There are those who still try to slam the door to silence us. They are still in Congress, in the military, in our churches and synagogues. They still deface and burn our homes. But we know now that we have friends and allies.

In the months ahead, keep your eyes open. Stay alert. Make sure your personal limits, whatever they are, are respected and protected. It may be a long way to the shore, but I'm glad to be swimming with all of you. ▼
