ALANA Group Looks Ahead

BRATTLEBORO — In response to a growing need for information and education around gay, lesbian, bisexual, and transgendered issues, the ALANA Community Program of Brattleboro has scheduled new presentations around issues such as homophobia and HIV/AIDS. ALANA offers support and resources to the Asian, Latino, African American, and Native American communities in Vermont.

The Community Program has invited professional facilitator Regina S. Dyton back to the area to offer a workshop on homophobia entitled "Facing It, Tracing It, and Erasing It." In particular, community leaders are encouraged to learn more about homophobia so that its effects can be countered in cultural communities.

ALANA also hopes to continue developing its HIV/AIDS programming. Its "Tribal Remedies" and "Hermana y Hermana" (or "Sister to Sister") offerings have demonstrated a need in the community to offer continued information and support. Director Naima Wade said that many in the community are still unaware of the "hidden language" used to talk about HIV/AIDS in the ALANA community. By way of example, she noted how the phrase "he/she has the package" is used to describe someone with an AIDS diagnosis.

"Some communities are still feeling under-represented," Wade said by way of explaining the need for further programming for the ALANA communities. "We need to work together and not see all these groups as being in competition with one another."

To find out more about the ALANA Community Program, call 254-2972 or write ALANA at 8 Williston Street, Brattleboro VT 05301. ▼

Champlain Women's Day Celebration Features Lesbian

BURLINGTON — In celebration of International Women's Day 1997, the Cultural Diversity Committee of Champlain College will present a panel discussion on "Diversity Among Women at Champlain College." The panel will discuss culture, tradition and changing roles of Champlain's women students, staff, and faculty members.

Among the panelists will be a lesbian student from England, as well as a single parent student, a student from Japan, a student from Russia, a blind student, an African-American staff member, and others. According to event organizers, the panel seeks to present "a unique opportunity to acknowledge and celebrate the diverse backgrounds of Champlain's women."

The panel will take place at noon in the Morgan Room of Aiken Hall on Thursday, March 6. Faculty, staff, and students at Champlain are cordially invited to attend. ▼
